Sven was a twon, but his twin died as a child. He joined the church in Sweden in 1866 and the family emigrated from Sweded about 1872. They sailed on a large steam ship, and came from New York to Salt Lake by train. There they were met by Alfred Dahlman, a brother of Inga Britta. He had came over some time before, and was working as a cook at the "Valley House" a hotel in Salt Lake. The Peterson family stayed there until they had made arrangements for a place to live. While in Sweden, Sven worked at the Wood Pupl Factory where wood was made into pulp, then into sheets like pasteboard. These were sent to England to be made into paper. The family moved to Heber about 5 tears after their arrival in Utah. He worked as a carpenter partner with Andrew Johnson, their first job was the home of Judge Thos S. Watson (Now home of Junior Jones 390 N. 5th E.) This partnership continued for many years (17 yrs.) They also made the casket for Mrs. Thomas Watson finishing it complete with black brocaded velvet on the outside, and black silk inside. In this partnership they built a flume from the Wasatch Canal to the shop later owned by Sven Poulson on 5th E. on about 1st S. There they installed a water power working machine, a scroll saw, a turning lathe, a sharper and boring machine where much scrool work was done for their building work, as there was much demand for that kind of work on the inside and outside of buildings at that time. He finally sold his share of the power machinery to Andrew Johnson, as failing eye sight made it impossible to continue in his work. As partners they had many contracts and did a great part of the building in the community. He died Dec. 28, 1905 at Heber City, age 70.
